Psychiatrists have an ethical, legal and professional responsibility to notify the Medical Board or Registering Authority if they believe a mental or physical condition of the medical practitioner concerned may affect that practitioner’s capacity to treat patients, or prevent him or her performing the functions necessary for his or her work as a medical practitioner, provided the practitioner has not already notified the Medical Board or Registering Authority personally.

This is supported by Section 9.1 of the Code of Ethics.